

Abstract

A memory device has a number of memory segments connected to a supply source through a supply control circuit. If one of the memory segments is defective, the supply control circuit isolates the defective memory segment from the supply 5 source. The memory device replaces the defective memory segment with a redundant segment.